

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

VALERIE GEORGE, et al.,

No. C-08-02675 EDL

Plaintiffs,

ORDER GRANTING SUTTER HEALTH DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS AS

v.

SONOMA COUNTY SHERIFF'S DEPT., et al.,

Defendants.

This action arises from the death of Ryan George on July 9, 2007 while he was in the custody of the Sonoma County Sheriff's Department, and after he had received allegedly inadequate medical care from medical staff at the Sonoma County jail and at Sutter Medical Center of Santa Rosa. On November 10, 2009, the Sutter Health Defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings as to Plaintiffs' ninth claim for violation of the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act ("EMTALA"), 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd. Plaintiffs opposed the Sutter Health Defendants' Motion. The Court held a hearing on January 26, 2010. For the reasons stated at the hearing and in this Order, the Sutter Health Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is granted.

Legal Standard

"After the pleadings are closed - but early enough not to delay trial - a party may move for judgment on the pleadings." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). A motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) challenges the legal sufficiency of the opposing party's pleadings. Westlands Water Dist. v. Bureau of Reclamation, 805 F.Supp. 1503, 1506 (E.D.Cal.1992). "Judgment on the

1 pleadings is proper when there are no issues of material fact, and the moving party is entitled to 2 judgment as a matter of law.” General Conference Corp. of Seventh-Day Adventists v. Seventh-Day
3 Adventist Congregational Church, 887 F.2d 228, 230 (9th Cir.1989).

4 A motion for judgment on the pleadings is treated the same as a motion to dismiss under 5 Rule 12(b)(6). Hal Roach Studios v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550 (9th Cir. 1990). A 6 complaint will survive a motion to dismiss if it contains “sufficient factual matter . . . to ‘state a 7 claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 (2009) (citing 8 Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974 (2007)). The reviewing court’s “inquiry is 9 limited to the allegations in the complaint, which are accepted as true and construed in the light most 10 favorable to the plaintiff.” Lazy Y Ranch LTD v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008).
11 Courts must then determine whether the factual allegations in the complaint “plausibly give rise to 12 an entitlement of relief.” Id. Though the plausibility inquiry “is not akin to a probability 13 requirement,” a complaint will not survive a motion to dismiss if its factual allegations “do not 14 permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct . . . .” Id. at 1949 (internal 15 quotation marks omitted) & 1950. That is to say, plaintiffs must “nudge[] their claims across the 16 line from conceivable to plausible.” Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

17 Discussion

18 EMTALA was enacted to ensure that individuals receive adequate emergency medical care, 19 regardless of an ability to pay. See Jackson v. E. Bay Hospital, 246 F.3d 1248, 1254 (9th Cir. 2001).
20 “Congress was concerned that hospitals were ‘dumping’ patients who were unable to pay, by either 21 refusing to provide emergency medical treatment or transferring patients before their conditions
22 were stabilized.” Eberhardt v. City of Los Angeles, 62 F.3d 1253, 1255 (9th Cir. 1995). The Act
23 protects all individuals, not just those who are uninsured. See Arrington v. Wong, 237 F.3d 1066, 24 1069-70 (9th Cir. 2001).

25 EMTALA requires hospitals with emergency rooms that participate in the Medicare program 26 to screen any individual, whether insured or not, who comes to an emergency room and requests 27 emergency medical treatment to determine whether the individual has an emergency medical 28 condition. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(a). An emergency medical condition is defined in relevant part

1 as:

2 [A] medical condition manifesting itself by acute symptoms of sufficient severity (including severe pain) such that the absence of immediate medical attention could 3 reasonably be expected to result in-4 (i) placing the health of the individual ... in serious jeopardy,
(ii) serious impairment to bodily functions, or 5 (iii) serious dysfunction of any bodily organ or part[.]

6 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(e)(1)(A).

7 If the hospital determines that an individual has an emergency medical condition, the 8 hospital must either provide further medical examination and treatment as may be required to 9 stabilize the patient, or transfer the individual to another medical facility under certain conditions.

10 See 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(b)(1), (c)(2). Under the statute, “to stabilize” means:

11 with respect to an emergency medical condition described in paragraph (1)(A), to 12 provide such medical treatment of the condition as may be necessary to assure, within reasonable medical probability, that no material deterioration of the condition is likely to result from or occur during the transfer of the individual from a facility, . . . .

13 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(e)(3)(A). The term, “stabilized,” means:

14 with respect to an emergency medical condition described in paragraph (1)(A), that 15 no material deterioration of the condition is likely, within reasonable medical probability, to result from or occur during the transfer of the individual from a 16 facility, . . . .

17 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(e)(3)(B). An individual who has not been stabilized cannot be transferred 18 unless: (1) the individual requests a transfer after being informed of the risks, a physician certifies 19 that the medical benefits reasonably expected from medical treatment at another facility outweigh 20 the increased risks to the individual from the transfer, or a qualified medical personnel makes the 21 above certification after a physician discusses the risks with the individual; and (2) the transfer is an appropriate transfer to that facility. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395dd(c)(1).

22 A hospital “does not violate EMTALA if it fails to detect or if it misdiagnoses an emergency 23 condition.” Bryant v. Adventist Health System/West, 289 F.3d 1162, 1166 (9th Cir. 2002) (“An 24 individual who receives substandard medical care may pursue medical malpractice remedies under 25 state law.”). EMTALA was not enacted to create a national standard of care or a federal claim for 26 medical malpractice. See Baker v. Adventist Health, 260 F.3d 987, 993 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing 27 Eberhardt, 62 F.3d at 1258).

28 Further, the patient stabilization requirement ends when a patient is admitted to the hospital

1 for inpatient care. See Bryant v. Adventist Health System/West, 289 F.3d 1162, 1167 (9th Cir.
2 2002) (“The stabilization requirement is ... defined entirely in connection with a possible transfer 3 and without any reference to the patient's long-term care within the system. It seems manifest to us 4 that the stabilization requirement was intended to regulate the hospital’s care of the patient only in 5 the immediate aftermath of the act of admitting her for emergency treatment and while it considered 6 whether it would undertake longer-term full treatment or instead transfer the patient to a hospital 7 that could and would undertake that treatment. It cannot plausibly be interpreted to regulate medical 8 and ethical decisions outside that narrow context.”). “If EMTALA liability extended to inpatient 9 care, EMTALA would be ‘convert[ed] . . . into a federal malpractice statute, something it was never 10 intended to be.’” Bryant, 289 F.3d at 1169.

11 Although the stabilization requirement ends upon admission to the hospital, the Bryant court 12 carved out a narrow exception to protect against blatant circumvention of the stabilization 13 requirement through sham “admissions.”

14 We agree with the Sixth Circuit that a hospital cannot escape liability under 15 EMTALA by ostensibly “admitting” a patient, with no intention of treating the 16 patient, and then discharging or transferring the patient without having met the 17 stabilization requirement. In general, however, a hospital admits a patient to provide 18 inpatient care. We will not assume that hospitals use the admission process as a subterfuge to circumvent the stabilization requirement of EMTALA. If a patient demonstrates in a particular case that inpatient admission was a ruse to avoid EMTALA's requirements, then liability under EMTALA may attach. But this is not such a case.

19 Bryant, 289 F.3d at 1169. Because Plaintiffs’ complaint is clear that Ryan George was admitted to 20 the hospital (see Third Am. Compl. ¶ 44), the Sutter Health Defendants cannot be liable under 21 EMTALA unless the Bryant exception applies. Bryant places the burden on the plaintiff to 22 demonstrate that the admission was merely a ruse, with the hospital lacking any intention to treat the 23 plaintiff.

24 Plaintiffs do not specifically allege that the Sutter Health Defendants lacked the intent to 25 treat Plaintiff after they admitted him to the hospital. Rather, Plaintiffs ask the Court to infer the 26 Sutter Health Defendants’ lack of intent through other allegations about the motives underlying their 27 treatment of Ryan. See, e.g., Third Am. Compl. ¶ 137 (alleging that the Sutter Health Defendants, 28 “acting under pressure or directions from County and Sheriff’s Department personnel, . . . intended

1 to discharge Mr. George to the Jail after a certain time period and/or following minimal 2 improvement in his mental status, regardless of whether or not his sickle cell crisis - manifested
3 largely in neurological symptoms - was sufficiently stabilized within the meaning of the statute.”); ¶
4 21 (alleging that the Sutter Health Defendants “may have caved to pressure from the County and 5 Sheriff’s Department to release him back to the Jail despite his critical medical status. These 6 Defendants collaborated to authorize Mr. George’s release to the Jail irrespective of the fact that Mr.
7 George was never seen by a neurologist (despite his significantly altered level of consciousness), as 8 well as these Defendants’ failure to complete a final diagnosis.”) (emphasis added); ¶ 124 (alleging 9 that the County Defendants interfered with the medical judgment of the Sutter doctors, “urging or 10 requiring that inmates such as Mr. George be returned to the Jail as soon as possible, even where 11 they remained in need to hospital treatment.”). It is questionable whether these allegations would be 12 sufficient, if they stood alone, to support an inference of a lack of intention to treat Ryan.

13 More importantly, Plaintiffs’ complaint contains several more specific allegations regarding 14 a considerable amount of treatment that Ryan received after he was admitted to the hospital during 15 his two day stay there. See Third Am. Compl. ¶ 45 (“... following his admission, Mr. George 16 continued to be diagnosed and treated primarily for an ‘altered mental status’ rather than for the 17 ongoing and severe sickle cell crisis. . . .”); ¶ 49 (alleging that a radiologist performed an MRI of 18 Ryan’s brain, which showed micro infarcts consistent with sickle cell crisis, but doctors accepted the 19 radiologist’s diagnosis of the MRI as negative); ¶ 51 (alleging that Dr. Matheson told Ryan’s family 20 that he had been given a spinal tap); ¶ 56 (alleging that Ryan had a physical therapy consult); ¶ 57
21 (alleging that Ryan had been given IV and oxygen for at least some period while in the hospital); ¶
22 58 (alleging that Ryan had an EEG, which was read as abnormal). These allegations of treatment
23 are starkly inconsistent with the inference Plaintiffs ask the Court to draw that the Sutter Health
24 Defendants lacked the intent to treat Ryan and admitted him to the hospital simply to avoid liability
25 under EMTALA. The treatment allegations also distinguish this case from Morgan v. North 26 Mississippi Medical Center, 403 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1129-30 (S.D. Ala. 2005), upon which Plaintiffs 27 rely. There, the court denied the defendant’s motion to dismiss the EMTALA claim based on the 28 Bryant exception where, unlike here, the plaintiff alleged that upon her husband’s arrival at the

1 hospital with serious injuries, officials demanded that the plaintiff arrange payment of her husband's 2 treatment and announced its intention to discharge her husband the very next day despite his serious 3 injuries.

4 As Plaintiffs have not pled facts sufficient to support the Bryant exception to EMTALA, the 5 Sutter Health Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Plaintiff's ninth claim is 6 granted.
